A model of information-based communication in a social network among self-selected volunteers. This article attempts to describe the ways in which a volunteer librarian functions in an information-based communication (IBC) social network with self-selected volunteers in a self-contained community. A key component of the article is an understanding of the nature of the information exchanged among its participants. Because it is focused on personal questions, the material exchanged may not be strictly "information" in the traditional sense.

Q: the best way to create objects I have one function which does 2 things instantiate a class. store the reference of the object in a list. I don't know if one of the two is more appropriate. Example `List list = new List(); ClassObject obj = new ClassObject(); list.Add(obj);` in both case, I have the same reference of the object in the list. 1) is this correct? 2) is there a better way? A: The first one is the right way. The second one would require you to either store it in a dictionary or create a wrapper class.

Q: Remote access with port forwarding I am trying to set up remote access to my web application from my Android device. Here is how it works: I have a Windows PC on my home network that has "Remote Desktop for Microsoft Windows" installed on it. My Android device connects to it on TCP/Port 5000 (RDP: SSH Protocol) My home network uses port forwarding on my router to forward port 5000 to the PC's IP. The problem is that after forwarding the port, the Android device gets a connection refused message when trying to establish an RDP connection to the remote PC (even though the data connection between the two devices is working fine). If I try to forward the connection on my home network to port 443 (HTTPS), it works fine. Why does RDP need a port different from HTTP? A: There are two separate issues here: HTTP doesn't require a port to be forwarded (but the connection needs to be encrypted anyway). RDP doesn't require HTTP at all - it's a protocol. It's conceivable that your Android device is connecting the port 5000 on the actual TCP/IP stack to your PC's actual (
